Abstract:

Graph distances have proven quite useful in machine learning/statistics, particularly in the estimation of Euclidean or geodesic distances. The talk will include a partial review of the literature, and then present more recent developments on the estimation of curvature-constrained distances on a surface, and well as on the estimation of Euclidean distances based on an unweighted and noisy neighborhood graph.