Abstract:
As an analyst, I used to think I didn’t like groups. And when studying generalized Bernoulli actions, I came across an example of a horrible combinatorial argument to prove a fact about groups. Luckily, there is another way: functional analysis, which I’d like to share with you. Now I realize I just don’t like finite groups, which usually aren’t amenable to analytic methods.