

Figure V.10: An environment map mapped into a sphere projection. This is the kind of environment map supported by OpenGL. See color plate C.7. The scene is the same as is shown in figure V.11. Note that the front wall has the most fidelity, and the back wall the least. For this reason, spherical environment maps are best used when the view direction is close to the direction used to create the environment map.