

Figure II.18: The cube on the left is rendered with an orthographic projection. The one on the right with a perspective transformation. With the orthographic projection, the rendered size of a face of the cube is independent of its distance from the viewer; compare, for example, the front and back faces. Under a perspective transformation, the closer a face is, the larger it is rendered.