

Figure IX.2: Shadow feelers: Rays from the eye are traced to their intersections with objects in the scene. Shadow feeler rays, shown as dotted lines, are sent from the points in the scene to each light in order to determine whether the point is directly illuminated by the point light source or whether it is in a shadow. The two shadow feelers marked with an “X” show that the light is not directly visible from the point.